

Lesson Pay Rules — Simple Guide

This one page covers almost every situation

July 2026

Whoever has the problem covers that one lesson

Your problem, your lesson. Our problem, our lesson. And only that lesson.

One table for every situation

What happened?	That lesson's pay	What you do	Rule
The student never came	Paid in full	Stay in the classroom until the scheduled end	2-1
The student postponed 30+ minutes ahead	Paid on the new day	Nothing (the lesson moves to another day)	2-3
The student arrived late	Paid in full	Teach whatever time is left	3-1
You joined late	Paid in full	Add the lost minutes at the end + a lateness penalty applies	4-1 4-3
Your home internet dropped HOME	Not paid	Once restored, later lessons are normal	5-2
The office internet dropped OFFICE	That lesson, in full	Just tell the supervisor at once (no make-up)	6-2
Lessons that never started during that outage OFFICE	Not paid	Normal again after restoration	6-3
The company system would not let you in	That lesson, in full	Do not wait — message your manager at once	8-1
Another teacher covered your lesson	Not paid	That teacher is paid It works both ways → page 2	9-2 9-3
A power cut hit you and the student together HOME	Not paid	Tell your manager	5-4
A power cut hit you and the student together OFFICE	That lesson, in full	Tell the supervisor	6-5

What does "that lesson only" mean? A lesson fee is counted per lesson — never by day, by hour, or by period. Only the single lesson where the problem happened is affected. The next page gives an example. (Rule 1-3)

The most important idea — pay is counted per lesson

Not by day, not by hour, not by period.
Only the one lesson where the problem happened.

Rules 1-2, 1-3, 1-4

For example — the office internet was down for two hours one afternoon

Lessons in that window	Pay	Why
The 1 lesson already running when it dropped	Paid in full	It was interrupted by our problem
The 2 lessons that never started	Not paid	No lesson took place
Lessons after service returned	Paid normally	They were taught normally

Why is it written this way? A lesson fee is payment for a lesson having been taught. So even when the fault is ours, we do not pay for lessons that never happened — and equally, the lesson our fault interrupted is paid in full.

When you are late (Rule 4)

Situation	That lesson's pay	Also
You joined late but made up the time	Paid in full	A lateness penalty applies — separate from making up the time
You were late and did not make it up	May be reduced	The time the student did not receive is reflected

The student did nothing wrong and waited in front of the screen. Waiting is already frustrating — a shorter lesson on top of that means losing twice. So please always add the minutes you were late.

When another teacher covers your lesson (Rule 9)

The fee goes to the teacher who actually taught it. You do not receive it.
But it works the other way too. When another teacher has a problem, you take their lesson and receive that fee. Cover work flows both ways, so over time it balances out.
Wherever possible we connect you through another line first so that you can continue your own lesson — a change of teacher is itself a loss for the student.

Home-based and office-based rules differ (Rules 5 & 6)

What you chose is yours.
What the company gave you is ours.

This one sentence explains the whole table below

What is the problem?	Working from home	Working in the office
Internet connection	Yours → that lesson not paid you chose it and you pay for it	Ours → that lesson paid in full the company installed it
Computer breaks down	Yours	Ours
Things you installed on it	Yours	Yours our PC, but you decide what goes on it
Power cut (both sides)	That lesson not paid	That lesson paid in full
Mangoi system problem	That lesson paid in full	That lesson paid in full

Using the office computer (Rule 7)

Please avoid these · Saving videos or large files that are not for teaching · Installing programs or apps from unknown sources · USB drives or downloads that could bring in a virus
If the computer becomes slow or breaks because of these and a lesson is disrupted, the responsibility is yours even though the computer is ours — because you decide what gets installed.

If you need a program, just ask us and we will install it for you. The first time, we only give guidance — you are not held responsible straight away. We do not look at your personal usage.

If your internet drops often, we move you to the office (Rule 10)

This is not a punishment. It is better for you.
At home, when your internet drops, that lesson is not paid. In the office, the internet becomes the company's responsibility, so the same event still pays you for that lesson. In other words, a burden moves off you and onto the company.

Step	What happens
1	We show you your own connection record — information, not a warning
2	You talk with your manager and we check the line . If solved here, it ends here
3	If not, you work in the office for four weeks
4	Once your connection is stable, you can go back to working from home

Questions teachers ask

Q1. If the student does not come, do I lose the fee? (2-1)

You are paid in full. Whether a student comes is not something you can decide. In return, please stay in the classroom until the scheduled end time.

Q2. My home internet dropped and the lesson stopped. (5-2, 5-3)

That lesson's fee is not paid. The connection you use at home is one you chose and maintain.

But it is only that one lesson. Lessons after the connection returns are paid normally — you do not lose the day.

Q3. Is an office internet failure my responsibility? (6-2, 6-3)

No — the company installed that line, so it is ours. The lesson that was cut off is paid in full, with no make-up required.

However, lessons that never started because the outage continued are not paid, since no lesson took place. After restoration, everything is normal again.

Q4. Another teacher covered my lesson. (9-2, 9-3)

The fee goes to the teacher who actually taught it. In return, when another teacher has a problem, you cover their lesson and receive that fee. It works both ways, so over time it balances out.

Q5. If I was late but made up the time, is that the end of it? (4-2, 4-3)

You are paid in full — by making up the time, the student receives the whole lesson.

But a penalty for the lateness itself still applies. That is separate from making up the time.

Q6. It is the company's computer — why is it my responsibility? (7-2)

The computer is ours, but what gets installed on it is your decision. Internet and hardware faults are entirely ours. If you need a program, ask us and we will install it.

Q7. A power cut disconnected me and the student. (5-4, 6-5)

If you are home-based, that lesson is not paid. If you are office-based, it is a company facility problem, so that lesson is paid in full.

Either way, lessons after restoration are paid normally.

Q8. What if the record does not match reality? (11-3, 11-4)

Tell us within 7 days through My Page. Your manager will check and correct it. Asking never counts against you.

Three things to remember

1

Whoever has the problem covers that lesson

Your problem, yours.
Our problem, ours. (1-1)

2

Only that one lesson is affected

Not a day, not an hour.
After restoration, normal. (1-2, 1-3)

3

Five minutes of class beats no class

English grows through repetition (3-2)

If anything is unclear, please ask your manager at any time. These rules exist not to punish you, but to draw the line of responsibility clearly so that you are never treated unfairly. The numbers in brackets are the article numbers in the full rulebook.
